The preschooler and the president; champions of freedom honored

MOVER AND SHAKER At first pass, Benjamin Crevier of Wilbraham doesn't seem like the kind of power broker the Republican Party would woo to aid in the party's quest to gain seats in the US House and Senate. But maybe Vice President Dick Cheney and the GOP see something in the 5-year-old that his preschool classmates and his baby brother, Jake, don't recognize. Benjamin, who answered the phone yesterday but had little more to say other than to get his mom, Kim, for us to talk to, was sent a several-page letter from Cheney, an invitation to a special dinner to honor President Bush, and a "Dear Friend of The President" letter from Senator George Allen of Virginia seeking the wee one's support — to the tune of $2,500 for dinner and a "special contribution" of up to $1,000. What would he get for the thousand bucks? The title of "Honorary Co-Chairman of the President's Dinner" — just what every kindergarten-hopeful wishes for. While the national GOP types couldn't explain why they were soliciting someone who counts his age in half-years — and they showed remarkably little humor about it — Benjamin's parents are willing to hazard a guess. "He subscribes to Forbes," mom said yesterday, "and Smithsonian." That explains everything. Young Benjamin Crevier had some frequent-flier miles from a trip to Hawaii that were about to expire, so his folks used the miles to order some magazines. (Mom said she's never actually seen him reading Forbes. Perhaps that's what he shares in common with Bush.) Earlier this week, Benjamin's father, David, "helped" him craft a letter to Cheney seeking some answers as to why the boy was chosen as a "special representative of his hometown." The letter included a question about dinner. "The invitation does not mention the food being served. I am a big fan of either Chuck E. Cheese's or of grilled cheese with the crust removed," it said. They haven't yet received a response.

GUYS NIGHT OUT — Rex Smith (center) with friends and fellow actors Treat Williams (left) and Kevin Kline at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel. Williams and Kline were in town to see Smith in "Kiss Me, Kate" at the Wang.

FREEDOM NOW What do Tom Menino, Robert Moses, and Chad Gifford have in common? (Don't overthink this.) The mayor, the civil rights leader, and the FleetBoston president and CEO took home awards Thursday night from Freedom House, a community civic-action agency based in Grove Hall. Also awarded as 2002 Champions of Freedom were roxbury.com founder Kenneth A. Granderson, president and CEO of Inner-City Software; Janet Moses, a civil rights veteran who is a pediatrician at MIT Medical; and Dr. Carolyn Goodman, mother of Andrew Goodman, one of three civil rights workers slain in Mississippi in the summer of 1964. Menino and Granderson won for their efforts to bring technology to Boston's underserved communities, and Gifford took the corporate diversity award.

HOW MUCH WOULD IT FETCH TODAY? The folks over at WGBH like to point out that in 1966, when the PBS station held its first live televised auction, Julia Child auctioned off a heifer and a pair of fainting goats. But today, as the station gears up for this year's installment, starting tomorrow, the auction includes a few more items (if not more interesting) than that first year. Among the highlights: a 2002 Toyota Camry LE, the pilot script of "The Sopranos" signed by the cast, cooking classes with the executive chef at the Federalist, a luxury box at the FleetCenter for a Britney Spears concert, and a one-year off-street parking spot on Newbury Street valued at $10,000. Although she won't be at this year's auction, Child has sent a bottle of wine from her home in California, signed by herself and Robert Mondavi. Celebrity auctioneers include Mayor Menino, Maison Robert executive chef Ken Duckworth, Newton mayor David Cohen, and public relations maven Sally Jackson.

DOWNTOWN SCENE Patriots owner Bob Kraft and a few friends stopped for drinks at Aqua in the Financial District on Thursday night before heading to the Vault for dinner. So which of chef Brian Maxwell's specialties did Kraft enjoy? The salmon.

THAT'S A LITTLE EARLY FOR US One generation knows her as the wigged-out Blanche Barrow in "Bonnie and Clyde" (for which she won an Academy Award), and the other recognizes Estelle Parsons as Rosanne's mother on the latter's sitcom. But tomorrow night, when the theater world gathers to honor its best at the Tony Awards, Parsons will be front and center for her nomination as "best featured actress in a play" for "Morning's at Seven." Parsons, a Marblehead native, has had a long and distinguished career that took her through a couple of changes before she found her true vocation: theater. Parsons was a student at Boston University's law school (her father and grandfather were lawyers in Lynn) when she decided that the restrictions on women were too much to bear. "That was a time when if you wanted to join a male friend for drinks at Locke-Ober you had to sit upstairs . . . you weren't allowed to sit downstairs with them," she said recently. So after working as a producer and a writer for the "Today" show, she became involved in the theater. The answer is simple for Parsons. "It's constantly evolving. It changes with every performance and every audience," she said.

THE HIGHEST FORM OF FLATTERY For "Mad TV" star and comic Frank Caliendo, "impressionist" isn't a bad word. In fact, it's his stock in trade. "People think of the old-style impression or . . . a comic that can't write, but I do hipper stuff," said Caliendo, who finishes out a three-day run in the region with two shows tonight at the Comedy Connection in Quincy Market. So what should you expect from Caliendo's show? What Jerry Seinfeld is to everyday life, Caliendo is to pop culture. "I spoof movies; it's really more cutting-edge," said Caliendo. "I don't do driving-in-rotaries-in-Boston jokes. . . . But whose idea was it to go straight by driving around in a circle?" OK, we all have our lapses.

Stargazing

Basketball legend Julius Erving has filed a lawsuit against a security company and a developer he partially blames for the death two years ago of his son, Corey, 19, who drove a car into a retention pond at Alaqua Lakes, a neighborhood under construction northeast of Orlando, Fla. Corey Erving's body was found after a five-week search. Julius Erving is suing the security firm for allowing his son into a restricted area, and the developer for not having fences or barricades. . . . Horse breeder John Endicott, husband of E! Entertainment Television producer Melissa Rivers, filed for divorce Wednesday in Los Angeles. The couple married in 1998. Rivers's mother is comedian Joan Rivers.
