Lowndes landfill issue hinges on trial

MONTGOMERY (AP) — A Montgomery County judge refused to stop the sale of a proposed landfill near the Alabama Voting Rights Trail in Lowndes County, saying a trial of a lawsuit is pending.

The landfill is controversial partially because of its proximity to the route of the 1965 Selma-to-Montgomery Voting Rights march. There are two civil lawsuits under way involving the landfill.

The Alabama Department of Environmental Management also has indicated it will not transfer the permit for operation of the facility until it receives some guidance from the courts.

A Montgomery political consultant, Lanny Young, presently holds the landfill permit, and Waste Management wants it.

But Earl and Ladon Dansby, Young's former business partners in Alabama Disposal Solutions, filed a civil lawsuit claiming there's a conspiracy to force them out of the corporation.

On Friday, the Dansbys asked Montgomery Circuit Judge Tracy McCooey for a preliminary injunction halting sale of the landfill. But the judge refused, saying the request is invalid since the case doesn't go to trial for months.

Dansby lawyer Doyle Fuller claims the permit was the only asset remaining of Alabama Disposal Solutions and he has evidence showing assets of the firm are dwindling away.

Young's attorney, James Anderson, said the Dansbys are working to stall the landfill so they can get some money.

Fire guts vacant downtown building

An early-morning fire has claimed a vacant landmark building in downtown Mobile as late-night Mardi Gras revelers were trying to get home.

Fire Department spokesman Steve Huffman said the five-alarm fire was reported just after 1 a.m. Saturday.

The entertainment district was packed with Mardi Gras revelers when the fire broke out, but there were no injuries.

Governor decides to use existing plan

Gov. Don Siegelman is going along with the Alabama Citizens for Constitutional Reform's proposal for rewriting the state's 1901 constitution.

"I want a unified front. I think it's important that we joint together and move this thing forward," Siegelman said.

Siegelman said he will continue to push for a constitutional convention to be held in Birmingham, away from Montgomery and many of the lobbyists' headquarters.

Records taken in healthcare probe

Records, computers and other evidence have been confiscated by federal agents investigating Oxford Home Health Services.

The firm is accused of billing its parent company for thousands of dollars for services that were performed by nonexistent employees. Some of the services reportedly provided were to deceased clients, according to law enforcement authorities.

Huntsville FBI agent Mike Ponzo confirmed that agents searched the business Friday. There were no immediate arrests.

The firm is owned by 41-year-old Margaret Adams and is next to her home in the Mount Moriah community.

State troops active

MONTGOMERY (AP) — Twelve members of an Alabama Army National Guard materials management detachment were mobilized in the war against terrorism.

The troops, members of the 200th Material Management Center in Homewood, will man positions in Germany where the unit has been on active duty.

The unit provides support performing such tasks as managing ammunition and petroleum operations for combat, aviation, tactical and support operations.

Also on Friday, Gov. Don Siegelman announced that nearly 400 Alabama Guard personnel will play work the Olympic Games in Salt Lake City, beginning Feb. 8.

Personnel from ordnance units in Opelika and Huntsville and from a Prattville-based military police battalion were called up for that duty.

SABRA auction set Thursday

By Arlethea Pressley
Times-Journal Writer

The seventh Annual Charity Dinner & Auction to benefit SABRA Sanctuary is less than a week away. SABRA Sanctuary is a non-profit organization serving Dallas, Wilcox and Perry counties. All the proceeds from this auction will go to benefit SABRA and support it's programs, Jo Ann Bowline, Executive Director of SABRA said.

"I am so excited we're having our seventh annual auction. The community has been so great in the past with supporting us. The auction has always been a success," Bowline said.

Money raised from the auction will enable SABRA to keep providing quality service to victims of domestic violence as well as sexual assault.

"There are a few tickets still available, they are $12.50 a ticket. Anyone wanting to purchase a ticket should do it soon, we don't encourage people coming at the last minute," Bowline said.

Those who do attend will not only get the satisfaction of knowing they are making a difference, but loads of good stuff, Bowline said.

"For this year's auction we've been given a lot of great items. We'll be auctioning two puppies (Golden Retriever and Alaskan Husky), lot's and lot's of artwork and door prizes," Bowline said.

Golf enthusiasts will certainly have a good time at the auction. Two of the packages to be auctioned off, Bowline said, contain such goodies as golf tees, golf prints, golf balls, certificates for golf games, etc.

Other items to be auctioned include jewelry, a lawnmower, a trip to Helenkorff Inn in Georgia and a trip to Hilton Head Inn and Resort in Hilton Head, South Carolina, Bowline said.

Pepsi-Cola, who are also donating the drinks, is donating a scooter, Bowline said.

"We are so grateful to anybody that has always participated and supported us. Because of the generous support of local businesses and individuals, all of the items to be auctioned were donated. We did not have to spend a dollar on purchasing auction items," Bowline said.

A new feature at this year's auction, Bowline said, will be a separate room filled with crystal and china items. When Renaissance closed last year they gave several pieces of china and crystal to SABRA, Bowline said. Patrons of the charity dinner/auction will have an opportunity to purchase any china or crystal item for a flat price of $5, Bowline said.

Bob Green will be reprising his role as announcer for the auction. Sponsors include Bama Budweiser of Selma, Alaqueco, Marion Bank and Trust and Selma Industrial & Welding Supply.

The event will be held at the Carl Morgan Convention Center Thursday, Feb. 7 beginning at 6 p.m. For information or to purchase a ticket contact Bowline at 877-4645.

Police say Orange Beach boater faked disappearance

GULF SHORES, Ala. (AP) — A boater's disappearance in waters off Orange Beach was faked as part of a scheme to collect insurance money, the Baldwin County prosecutor says.

Beth Ketterman told authorities that her husband, Ken Ketterman, fell from a rented boat into Perdido Pass on Jan. 20, prompting an air and water search involving the Coast Guard and about 60 rescue workers from Alabama and Florida.

The search continued until the 36-year-old Ketterman was found Thursday — 11 days after his disappearance — lying in a roadside ditch near Fort Morgan. He was hospitalized overnight, but had no serious injuries.
